FLOORING XTRA

Timber

Over the last two decades, the popularity of engineered timber flooring has grown exponentially the world over. Put simply, nothing is quite as beautiful or adds as much value to your home or environment than a real timber floor. Leading the race for the most stunning, versatile and popular timber species during this period has been European Oak.

Whilst it is more expensive than other flooring types that attempt to imitate it's natural beauty, sometimes there's just nothing like the real thing! Apart from colour and design, important considerations when looking to purchase a timber floor should include the raw material sourcing and environmental credentials, the coating used to pre-finish the panels, the quality of the click joining system and the warranty offered on the product.

TIMBER

Wellington

Genuine European Oak, stained in a range of timeless colours and pre-finished with market-leading performance UV lacquers, the Wellington range is designed for performance and supported by leading product warranties. Whilst usually installed as a floating floor, Wellington can also be directly stuck to a well prepared subfloor.

Completely waterproof, hybrid flooring offers great levels of resistance to staining, fading and scratching. Hybrid planks can be installed in any area of the home and are available in a wide variety of colours and plank sizes.

Apart from colour and design, important considerations when looking to purchase a hybrid floor should include the dimensional stability of the panels, the quality of the click joining system and the warranty offered on the product.

HYBRID

Merseyside Classic

At 1500mm long, Merseyside Classic is longer than most other hybrid floors, adding a more stylish appeal to your interior.
